The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Takano in view of Moriya. Takano teaches all of the limitations of claim 1 except the camshaft holder and the cylinder head are not separate elements. Instead, the cylinder head contains the holder element.

Moriya also teaches a camshaft holder which has a fuel pump mounted on one end, but the holder element and the cylinder head are separate parts.

It would have been obvious to make the holder part of the head of Takano into a separate element because this would have allowed for a replacement of the bearing of the holder without requiring the removal of the entire head, thus representing good engineering practice.

Claim 2 – 4 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

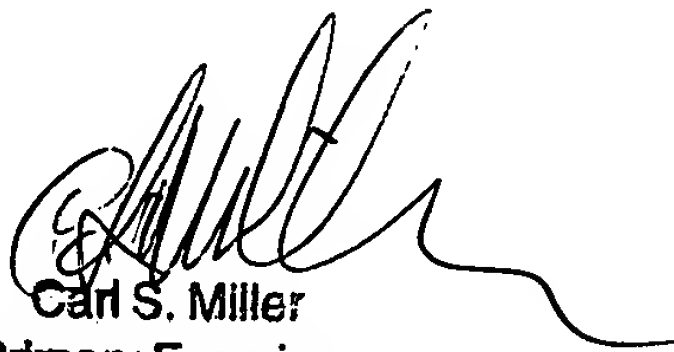

Claims 5-8, 10-11 and 13-18 are allowed.

Applicant's arguments filed April 19, 2004 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive. In particular, applicant's arguments regarding all of the claims except Claim 1 have been found to be convincing in light of the more specific language used regarding the reinforcing rib. With regard to Claim 1, however, the element (7) of Moriya does appear to link the bearings (6) of the holding device together as required by this broad claim.

Art Unit: 3747

Since Claims 2-3 were not properly addressed in the previous office action this action has been made non-final.
